

IT'S ALWAYS GROWING SEASON

in Vineland, New Jersey

Agriculture has been an integral part of life and commerce in Vineland, New Jersey since its founding, and dozens of family farms continue to produce a wide variety of fruits, vegetables, and herbs. Located in the heart of the northeast corridor, the city offers both an affordable business location and an excellent quality of life. It also hosts the Vineland Produce Auction, which is the largest farmer's cooperative on the east coast. In addition to serving the needs of 550 New Jersey growers, the auction also provides a network of broker, buyer, and wholesale activities to domestic and international markets.

"New Jersey agriculture has deep roots in Vineland, with innovative family farms that have been working the land for generations," said Vineland Mayor Anthony Fanucci. "It represents a way of life that we are very proud of, and an industry that is critical to the local economy and to the state's economy. In fact, the Vineland area is the top overall producer of crops in the state including being number one in vegetables and number three in fruits."

At over 69 square miles, Vineland is the largest city in New Jersey with a mix of both urban and rural settings, and two thriving industrial parks, with a third being developed. The city truly has much to offer in terms of location, municipal infrastructure, support services, and financial incentives.

"Vineland presents unlimited opportunities for companies related to agriculture and the food industry. Our low energy costs, high-quality potable water, available capacity for industrial wastewater treatment, logistics and distribution advantages, and the availability of quality, locally grown produce are the perfect ingredients for your success. Give us a call and find out why It's Always Growing Season in Vineland," Mayor Fanucci concluded.
